

THREE-DAY NATIONAL CONFERENCE

UNIVERSALITY OF ISLAMIC LAW

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS

29-31 March, 2022

Introduction

The international law has witnessed several new developments. New areas such as international criminal law, international legal regime of human rights, international environmental law and international trade and investment law have emerged at the international arena. These developments have not only led to the evolution and formation of new principles and norms in the international law but have also opened new avenues for academic research and endeavor. As a result scholarly work of considerable size has been and is being produced in every field of modern international law.

For the Muslim world, being an important segment of international community, these developments in particular the international criminal law and human rights are areas of attention and concern. It is generally believed that there are certain points of tension or even conflict between international law and Islamic law on the issue of human rights. Hence such issues should be thoroughly studied and analyzed in the light of principles of Islamic law.

Islamic law contains a large corpus of principles and rules in the areas referred to above. Hence it is required to examine the modern developments in international law and illustrate the parallel principles in Islamic law to check the compatibility of the both. This conference would provide an opportunity to explain the teachings of Islamic law on the issues of human rights and criminal law.
